

The Guardian

Know they're okay. Before you have to ask

*"My parents are getting older.
I live in another country.
I call every day just to make sure they're okay."*

A phone call is not enough.

Asynchronous

A call only works if mum picks up. At 2 AM in Munich, you have no idea if she's okay.

Blind Spots

Missed meds. Irregular eating. Slow decline. None of this appears on a phone call.

Peace of Mind Gap

35 million NRIs abroad. No reliable, passive way to know a parent is safe today.

"My parents are in Hong Kong. I'm in Munich. This is how I find out if they're okay."

An agentic AI layer on data that already exists.

Smart cameras, Apple Watch, pill dispensers — they all record data. None of it goes anywhere useful. Guardian aggregates these streams, learns what a normal day looks like, and delivers five human-readable signals every morning.

The Guardian

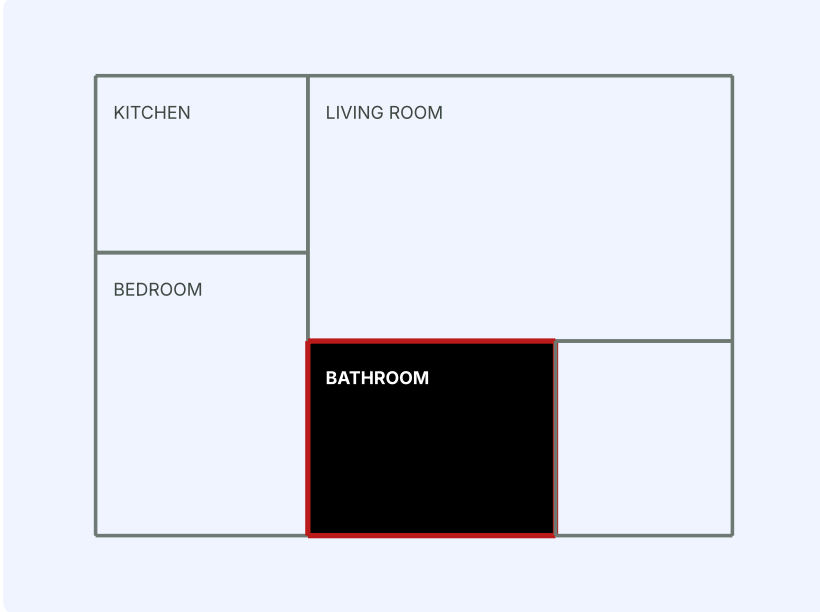

Mrs. Wong

! FALL DETECTED IN BATHROOM

ACTION

Floor Plan

LIVE ALERT

NORMAL

Woke Up

07:15 AM

NORMAL

Ate

Breakfast

NORMAL

Took Meds

Morning 3/3

FAIR

Rested Well

6h 12m

YES

Helper Present

IDLE

Voice Check-In

Hong Kong is facing a perfect storm

1

Rapidly Ageing Population

By 2046, more than 1 in 3 Hong Kong residents will be over 65.

2

More Seniors Living Alone

Thousands of elderly people live independently with limited daily supervision.

3

Families Living Apart

Children increasingly work abroad or elderly moving across to the Greater Bay Area.

4

Caregiver Shortage

Demand for elderly care is growing faster than available resources.

5

Healthcare Under Pressure

The system cannot scale through human monitoring alone.

Hong Kong doesn't need more data.

It needs intelligence that turns data into early intervention.

The ageing population is one of the largest global challenges of our time

1.6 billion people

Over 65 worldwide
by 2050

Hundreds of millions

Will live independently or
with limited daily
supervision

Millions of families

Will be caring for ageing parents
remotely

$2+ trillion

Global AgeTech
market opportunity
over the next decade

Guardian grows with the ageing economy

We start with peace of mind for families.

We scale into the operating system for ageing societies.

The Guardian

Know they're okay. Before you have to ask